Students' innovations on the International Programmers Day

The College of Engineering, Abu Dhabi Campus, celebrated International Programmers Day by organizing an event entitled "Happy Programmers Day", under the supervision of Eng. Esra Al-Nashash. During the event, students' outstanding software projects were presented, in addition to interactive presentations filled with interesting and useful information.

Program directors, faculty members, and students from different majors attended and participated in the competitions, and the winners received valuable prizes. This event aimed to introduce students to modern software skills and techniques and some of the most critical applications such as programming robots, augmented reality, and artificial intelligence.

The organizers from the College of Engineering were keen on organizing this event to celebrate International Programmers Day, on which the world honors the innovative programmers who have made a positive impact on the world by developing programs and designing applications that facilitate life.
